

Management Of Risks Occurring In The Course Of Comprehensive Delivery Of A Construction Project – Singapore Experience

Introduction

Participants of the construction industry face relatively more risks than those of other industries for the simple reason that they are people of many different professions, different trades, different levels of education and intelligence as well as different business backgrounds. It follows that coordination of their actions and activities becomes more complicated and demanding. The nett result is that some of the risks that could be encountered in the course of implementation of a construction project (financially and time-wise) are relatively more costly to deal with. It is unfortunate that such risks, whether they are direct or indirect, are not so obvious or hidden and hence people fail to recognise or pay attention to them.

Objectives

The objective of this short course is to identify and waken players of the industry to as many as practically possible risks occurring in the course of comprehensive delivery of a construction project and suggest ways to avoid, mitigate, eliminate or overcome such risks.

Target Audience

- 1) Those managing construction project,
- 2) Engineers,
- 3) Architects and
- 4) Quantity Surveyors
